Procrastination

Alice,

I'm a horrible procrastinator and time manager—in school, at work, cleaning my apartment, you name it, I'm somehow always putting it off until tomorrow, or taking forever to finish. Predictably, I keep missing the procrastination workshops offered at my school. Do you have any practical suggestions on time organization and overcoming procrastination habits?

? Always Late

Answer

Dear Always Late,

An inordinate amount of stress in students' lives revolves around time, and procrastination is probably the number one time management problem of all! Procrastination can be a mask for unrealistic perfectionist tendencies, self-doubt, or fear of change. It can also simply be a result of poor time management and ineffective study skills. With patience and determination, you can change some of your procrastinating tendencies. Here are a few time management strategies:

- Be realistic about what you can accomplish in a day. Prioritize two or three major goals or to-do's each day, leaving other activities "lower down" on your list.
- Schedule your activities for peak efficiency. Do the tasks that require more brain power during the times of the day when your energy level is highest.
- Divide your projects into small pieces. The job at hand can then become more manageable, and your steady progress might encourage you to move ahead.
- Create an environment in which your productivity can be maximized. This may mean finding a place with minimal distractions, such as a quiet study room in the library.
- Create a schedule that allows flexibility for unanticipated events (e.g., distractions, computer crashes). Remember to leave at least 15 percent tip? add extra time into your schedule for each activity because often they take longer than you think.
- Forgive yourself if you don't complete all of the things on your to-do list? you're only human.

Identifying the reason why you procrastinate may help you the kick the habit. Think about your feelings towards the task at hand. What will happen if you fail/succeed? Are you putting it off because of lack or interest and boredom? What will happen once the project is complete?
And, though procrastination can lead to stress, the opposite can also be true: stress can cause procrastination, as well. For some tips on minimizing stress, check out Stress, anxiety, and learning to cope [2] in the Go Ask Alice! Emotional Health [3] archive. You might also see if you can speak with a health promotion professional or mental health professional at your campus' student health center to discuss your procrastination habits in detail. They may also offer you some additional strategies to implement as you take on this issue.

By the way, taking the time to write your question means that you did not procrastinate on one thing! This is a great first step towards managing your procrastination habit. Keep up the good work!

Alice!
Category:
Emotional Health [4]
Stress & Anxiety [5]

Related questions

Time management [6]
Can't study during the day.... [7]
All night, done right: Getting the most out of an all-nighter [8]
Short sleep + long naps = Healthy? [9]

Resources

Alice! Health Promotion (Morningside) [10]
Counseling and Psychological Services (CPS) (Morningside) [11]
Center for Student Wellness (CUMC) [12]
Mental Health Service (CUMC) [13]
Published date:
Apr 17, 1995
Last reviewed on:
Apr 07, 2017
Go Ask Alice! is not an emergency or instant response service.

If you are in an urgent situation, please visit our Emergency page to view a list of 24 hour support services and hotlines.

Source URL: http://www.goaskalice.columbia.edu/answered-questions/procrastination-1

Links